Anonymous Writing.—A few years ago when the experiment had not been tried in periodical publications, many plausible arguments, mixed with abundant nonsense, were used against anonymous writing. Mr.
Morley dismisses with just contempt language about masked braves, and he is not disposed to assent to Mr.
Lewer's questionable proposition that signature is the best security for sincere expression of opinion. In many instances the necessity of signing an article would produce an opposite result. A paradoxical cynic sometimes said that he would scorn to say to a man's face what he habitually said of him behind his back.
Perhaps he may have remembered that criticism of the looks, the conduct, or the character of another may be perfectly legitimate in his absence, though it would be insolent, if not brutal, if it were uttered to his face. Comments on the conduct of statesmen become unnecessarily affronting when they are published with the name of the critic. Mr.
Morley also observes that the habit of publishing the names of periodical writers renders it difficult for an unknown author to find a vehicle of publication. If he had formulated a definite conclusion, he would perhaps have thought it desirable that neither practice should be exclusively followed. Even in the pages of the Fortnightly Review some unprofitable essays have been recommended by the names of writers, who may have been eminent in other respects, but were deficient in literary gifts.—
